

and thought himself a very clever fellow when Tom laughed at him; but Tom only laughed at his ignorance.

Tom finding he could make nothing of him, gave him up, and would not teach him any longer, but advised his father to make a chimney-sweeper of him; for though, says he

Ja

CROP the CONJURER.

Jack will not climb up the Hill Learning, he may get up a chimney well enough; and though he will burthen his head with sense, he may carry a good load of foot upon his back. Jack's father took Tom Tru advice, and put him apprentice to Black brush, who lived at the bottom of the town. Only see what a pretty figure he cuts!
